Top Service

Lesson for February 21, 1960

THE MOST over-used and ill-used word in the English language, perhaps, is "service." It's the great American catch-word. Your car dealer, florist, banker, garbage collector and preacher all talk about service. Certain business men's associations are called "service clubs." In [illegible] miserable places I have the sign over the door: SALES AND SERVICE. When you look into it, often it turns out that what is meant by service is "making something good that should. Dr. Forsman have been good in the first place." It is often something that is bragged about whereas it ought to go without saying. It is often not done well (as in poor restaurants or garages) and sometimes consists in furnishing something not asked for or needed.

Services of the Church

The church in America can't escape it. If the church did not offer service it would be most peculiar, and in fact would hardly be a church at all. For it, almost alone, serves by its very nature. All the institutions of society that do truly render service, were inspired or created by the church in the first place. (Orphanages and savings banks come to mind, and there are many others, notably schools.)

But what are the services of the church? We often use the term "church service" to mean the meeting for public worship and preaching. We cannot quarrel with that use of the word, but that is not what is meant here. What we mean is, when the minister calls on a new family and tells them the services of his church are at their disposal, what does he mean? Certainly something more than to say the worship-meetings of the church are open to them.

Many minor methods of service are used by the church: operating kindergartens, book clubs, employment agencies, loan funds, not to mention more elaborate projects such as educating people on the moral side of public questions, operating hospitals, publishing houses, schools and so on. By calling these "minor" we do not mean they are unimportant or that the church should not undertake them. When Paul wrote: "Let us do good to all men, especially to those who are of the household of faith," he laid down the foundation principle of every service project that deserves the name.

Nevertheless, the question still is: What is the most vital service, the one service the church can render? Surely it must be to give people what they need the most. Suppose a man is dying of a serious disease. He may not want any particular medicine, or any medicine at all. But a doctor, examining him, may know just the specific medicine for his trouble. He ministers to the man's need, not to his immediate appetite.

That human beings need most in one word, God. The church is doing the supreme service for us when it shows us the way back to God. (Let us rather say, the way toward to God; he is ahead of us, not the other way around.) The doorway to God has two keys, like a safety deposit box: one key is marked Faith and the other Repentance. God gives us the keys but never forces us to use them.

To Feed and Defend

The church is often thought of as a flock of sheep, its leader as shepherds. In addressing the elders of Ephesus, who remembered well his three years among them, Paul marks out the two things a shepherd does for his sheep: to feed and to defend them against wolves and other beasts. Some people suppose that a church's service is confined simply to proclaiming repentance and faith — in other words, the church's whole and only business is evangelism. This was not Paul's practice. He, and the elders after him, if they followed his example, also fed and defended Christ's people. "Feeding" means all the church does in nourishing and building up Christ-like character, especially teaching, preaching, counseling, training for Christian service at the highest levels. "Defending" means keeping the church strong, despite the attacks of all who would destroy it, from without or within.

Leather is a favorite for suits and coats again this spring. The leather can be cleaned with warm water and soap on a damp cloth.

Soft kid greatcoats are expensive but a wise investment if you need a sport coat. With good care it will last for ages and is warm and lightweight.

The new hats are bulkier and, after such a long term with tiny hats, they are a welcome change for most of us. There are so many different shapes that there is something for everyone. Don't invest in an extreme design unless you feel completely at ease in it. Instead, try one of the modernized numbers.

The shoe of middle color value is back. The most important color range is beige, very pale to medium tan. Pastel shoes with matching costume or a harmonizing costume will be good for late spring. and all summer. Both toes and heels continue to be slim. Spectacular pumps are coming in for a big revival, and strap pumps are still news.

Gloves are wrist-length or eight-button. Pale tones in stockings go with the new pale tones in shoes. Sheer meshes look well with spectators, sandal-foot stockings with sandals.
